An Apology for Poetry is a work of literary criticism by Elizabethan poet Philip Sidney. It was written in approximately 1580 and first published in 1595, after his death. It is generally believed that he was at least partly motivated by Stephen Gosson, a former playwright who dedicated his attack on the English stage, The School of Abuse, to Sidney in 1579, but Sidney primarily addresses more general objections to poetry, such as those of Plato. In his essay, Sidney integrates a number of class

Apology was written in the sixteenth century renaissance literary climate that was concerned about aesthetic problems regarding the object and purpose of poetry itself. Thus unlike Thomas Lodge's Defence of Poetry (1580), Sidney's Apology is much more than a reply to Gosson. He proceeds to give an argument for the value of poetry and its Sidney's discussion of oration alongside poetry reminds the reader that Sidney himself is both a poet and an orator, and that the Apology is an oratorical praise of poetry that, like all good writing (according to its own arguments) employs plenty of poetic metaphors and images to make its case. Sidney also writes the Apology and his other poetry in English, thereby endorsing the argument he makes here for the virtues of the English language.

In the early 1580s, Sir Philip Sidney wrote An Apology for Poetry; he was using the word 'apology' in its older sense of 'defence' or 'argument for', but there are a number of classic poems which take apologies, and saying sorry, as their (loose) theme. Here are ten of the very best 'sorry' poems, whether they find the poet saying sorry for doing something, or expressing sorrow over something regrettable or unfortunate.

An Apology for Poetry 1. "It is not rhyming and versing maketh poesy. One may be a poet without versing." Ans. Sidney had heard of the different charges against poetry. Verse was attacked by the critics. Sidney maintained that verse was an ornament of poetry. Versing and rhyming helped in memorizing the poem and its virtuous action.
