We need more masculinity, not less - American Thinker

Masculinity is the physiology of our brains and our bodies, and the hormones we shared earlier. Manliness is about harnessing the tools we do have - physiology, hormones, experience, beliefs, etc. - in order to produce the outcomes that we're after. This is manliness. Again, masculinity is not up for debate.

What is Masculinity?

From a young age, we are told to be quiet, sit still, follow the rules, listen to mommy, obey the teacher and avoid any display of aggression, talking back or acts of "masculinity". Not only are we not taught how to be a masculine man (or how to be masculine at all), but we are actively discouraged from seeking these answers for ourselves.
