He didn't land on the moon, he isn't an Olympic athlete, but he has a fascinating story to tell; and all because of his sister. She kept pushing and pushing. As in Galaxy Quest - never give up! Not as good as Into the Void, but just as nerve-racking.

Lost In The Himalayas. by. James Scott, Joanne Robertson. 3.68 · Rating details · 63 ratings · 8 reviews. In the Himalayan winter, without food or shelter, a human being is not expected to live longer than a week. James Scott lasted 43 days. He survived cold, hunger, isolation and despair, hanging on the dwindling hope that a search team might find him, or that he could crawl out when the snow thawed.

James Scott, Nepal, principles of survival, survival, trekking. Unusually this is not the story about a mountaineer surviving some great ordeal on one of the high peaks of the Himalayas. Instead this is the incredible story of a twenty-two year old man named James Scott who in December 1992 before starting his medical training at a hospital in Katmandu in Nepal, went for a walk, became lost in bad weather and 43 days later was rescued after having survived a month and half on two chocolate ...

Readers must know there is some sort of 'happy ending' as James survives to tell his story, but this is unlikely to ease the anguish of a tragic tale. 'Lost in the Himalayas' is a well structured and well written inspirational story of human spirit.

No doubt an extraordinary survival tale, like those of James Scott and Robert Bogucki. Both men survived 43 days alone before being rescued from their sharply contrasting plights - Scott was lost in the snowy Himalayas; Bogucki in the hot red sands of Australia's Outback. Scott, an Australian medical student, became lost in the Himalayas in 1992.
