One type of healthcare organization combines the freedom of a PPO with the lower premium of an HMO: the consumer-driven health plan, or CDHP. Also called high-deductible health plans, CDHPs have a deductible ranging from at least $1,250 for individuals to $2,500 for families, according to the National Business Group on Health. Once you have paid this designated amount, the plan pays 100 percent of the cost of medical treatment, and co-pays disappear.
