Prof Stirling says the Akatore Fault dips at 45deg to 50deg below the ground towards the southeast. Over some millions of years it has created the low range of coastal hills.

"While that uplift has gone on, the Big Creek has managed to keep pace and cut down as the hills have risen up, and that's called an antecedent gorge.

Trump's rollbacks are on shaky ground because most were done not through Congressional lawmaking but via presidential executive orders that can be easily torn up by a new administration. That means signature measures ranging from the withdrawal of the United States from the Paris climate agreement to the easing of vehicle emissions targets could vanish fast.
