SEGREGATION Segregation was the name coined in early twentieth-century South Africa for the set of government policies and social practices which sought to regulate the relationship between white and black, colonizers and colonized. Many elements of segregation had precursors in the period of Dutch rule between

Segregation and Apartheid in Twentieth-Century South Africa

This oversimplifies a complex issue; there is evidence that segregation was in decline by 1948, and it was the Nationalist electoral victory then that introduced apartheid against this trend. Apartheid was strongly driven by ideology in its attempts to control all social and political relationships, and it frequently went beyond what was practical in the pursuit of its flawed vision.

History Indoors. When people think of South African history, their thoughts tend to jump to the notorious apartheid regime which lasted from 1948 to 1994. However, there is a lengthy backstory to apartheid, which offers a logical explanation of why the regime came to be. In the first half of the twentieth century, South Africa experienced numerous state and socially implemented segregationist actions, all of which culminated in the election of D. F. Malan's Herenigde Nasionale Party in 1948.
