While it is recognized that language can pose a barrier to the transfer of scientific knowledge, the convergence on English as the global language of science may suggest that this problem has been resolved. However, our survey searching Google Scholar in 16 languages revealed that 35.6% of 75,513 scientific documents on biodiversity conservation published in 2014 were not in English.

Languages Are Still a Major Barrier to Global Science

For almost any craft or art form, the initial rough creation has to be reshaped, sanded, revised, polished, or fine-tuned, as do the draft and subsequent forms of a scientific paper. In other words, good scientific communication is not the product of an initial attempt by a talented writer, but the end result of repeated reviewing and revising.
