Triumph 2000 & 2.5PI, by Graham Robson. Crowood Autoclassics, £19.95. Perhaps the 2000 was not one of the all-time great motorcars, but it's easy to forget what a serious player in the executive market Triumph once was. Robson's outline is thorough and well illustrated, and all the better informed because he was involved in both the development and the competition career of the 2000 and the later 2.5PI, the pioneering fuel-injected variant.

Triumph 2000 & 2.5PI - Motor Sport Magazine

The 2000 engine can be taken to 2.5 using its crankshaft and rods, but really needs a TR6 head for best effect (as fitted to engines for 1969). The same tuning rules apply to the smaller engine but the hike to 2.5-litres is worth up to 20bhp alone according to Triumph, so it has to be the best first step. How about Stag V8 power?

In 1968, the 2.5PI was created, by fitting a fuel-injected TR5 engine under the 2000 bonnet. The Lucas injection system proved to be unreliable though, so a twin-carburettor version was introduced alongside it in 1974 – however, this power boost was enough to maintain the car's competitiveness against the Rover P6B.

The 2.0 litre can sustain much higher RPM, and might thus give more top end power if tuned for full race. For good low end torque and perhaps also every-day power, go for the 2.5 litre. For increased reliability with high lift cams, ensure that a duplex timing chain is used (standard on 2.5 litre engines).
