The Vox AD120VTX combo amp was introduced at the 2003 Summer NAMM Music Trade Show in Nashville, TN. The AD120VTX replaced the AD120VT, an amp that had been first offered only two years earlier. The 2003 Vox product catalog dated "Summer 03" suggests that both the AD120VT and AD120VTX were initially offered concurrently.

The new AD60VTX and AD120VTX combos both feature newly designed Custom VOX/Celestion Neodymium magnet 8 Ohm speakers (dubbed NeoDog) that are highly efficient, extremely lightweight and SOUND GREAT. In addition to the new NeoDog speakers, we now house them in an all-new up-graded ply cabinet for improved tonal balance.

Addendum - Vox

The AD120VT followed the basic proportions of the Vox AC-30. Two Celestion Vox 7080 speakers were connected to the amp's stereo output amplifier. The design of both the preamp and power amp stages of the AD120VT were radically new. Neither the REMS modeling preamp nor the Valve Reactor power amp section had ever been used in an amplifier before.

Valve Reactor technology was first used on the VOX AD60VT & AD120VT Valvetronix amps. Since conventional modeling effects for line recording are not used directly with a speaker, they do not include a power amp circuit, output transformer, or speaker. In other words, they only have a preamp circuit.

The 2003 Vox product catalog dated "Summer 03" suggests that both the AD60VT and AD60VTX were initially offered concurrently. The AD60VTX differed from the AD60VT in several ways. The most notable change was the replacement of the Celestion 7080 12" speaker from the AD60VT with the Celestion/Vox "Neo (or new) Dog."

Fast-forward to today and Vox has now released its latest generation of successful Valvetronix modeling amplifiers. The Valvetronix AD120VTX is the company's 120-watt (60w x 2) stereo modeling combo amplifier - and is the most powerful of the two VTX amplifiers (which also includes a smaller 60 watt combo).

The Vox AD120VT uses 1 x ECC83 (also known as 12AX7) valve/tube. The Valvetronix "Valve Reactor" circuit converts what would normally be a preamp tube to a one watt tube power amp. So the output from this one watt tube circuit is then fed into a solid state amplifier. Here it is boosted to a very useable 60 watts.
