Who owns the sky? For most of history, people never actually visited the sky, but the common law nonetheless had an answer: cujus est solum ejus est usque ad coelum – he who owns the soil owns up to the sky. This rule worked well enough for centuries because it only came up when, say, someone built a structure or owned a tree that overhung someone else's land, or when someone provocatively held his arm over his neighbor's fence.
